Dear Colleague,

We would like to draw your attention to an intriguing proposal that seeks to break away from the conventional wisdom associated with tourism research and education.

This is an invitation for you to join us at an International Conference entitled "Myths of Tourism" organised jointly by the University of Zadar, Department of Tourism and Communication Studies and the University of Zagreb, Faculty of Economics & Business, Department of Tourism. It will take place in Zadar, Dalmatian coast, Croatia, 9-12 May 2013.

The twofold aims of this conference are to raise questions in the multidisciplinary field of tourism that will provoke curiosity and provide a forum for both academics and practitioners to rethink the various concepts of tourism research and development. In this respect a number of renowned scholars and researchers in diverse tourism disciplines have agreed to give keynote speeches challenging the various myths of tourism.

Despite the ever increasing number of academic institutions, tourism programmes and individual tourism researchers around the world, there is still a myriad of myths that needs to be addressed. Do we assess critically enough common expressions such as "tourism as a global industry"?

Why is tourism not an industry? How global is tourism? How many myths of tourism still exist? Have tourism researchers themselves contributed to creating some additional myths of tourism? How effectively have researchers from different disciplines been solving certain challenges that exist within tourism - both from the researchers' and the practitioners' focuses? How successfully do we disseminate and implement the results of research? Is theory still lagging behind practice? Who pulls the strings of tourism development?

The conference adopts an alternative approach that seeks to raise some important questions and shed a new light on those tourism issues the answers to which have been taken for granted. Do we challenge ourselves sufficiently to unlearn the commonly accepted myths, thereby moving tourism scholarship forward?
